California History is the top-flight historical journal of California. As such, it is committed to publishing well researched, thoughtfully argued pieces that go well beyond a purely descriptive narrative. Published quarterly, CALIFORNIA HISTORY accepts electronic submissions year-round via email to: maryann.irwin@csueastbay.edu.

SUBMISSION GUIDELINES

Length: Manuscripts, including endnotes, must not exceed 14,000 words.

Abstracts: All article submissions must be accompanied by an abstract no longer than 500 words.

Formatting: All text, including quotations and endnotes, should be prepared in double-spaced typescript according to The Chicago Manual of Style (University of Chicago Press). Because submissions are evaluated anonymously, the author's name should appear only on the title page. Please provide your full address, including e-mail, in all correspondence.

THE CALIFORNIA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

CONTRIBUTORS

CAROLINE COLLINS is a UC President's Postdoctoral Fellow in the Department of History at UC Irvine and an affiliated researcher with the Democracy Lab and the Indigenous Futures Institute at UC San Diego, where she earned her PhD in communication. She holds an MFA in creative writing from UC Riverside and a BA in American literature and culture from UC Los Angeles. Her work examines public remembrances of the American West through archival methods, ethnographic study, media production, and public history exhibition. She is currently working on her first book manuscript, "Erecting Eden: The Public Remaking of Race and Place in the California Origin Story." Her public scholarship includes exhibits and media produced in collaboration with the California Institute for Rural Studies, the California Historical Society, the California African American Museum, Exhibit Envoy, and the First Nations Development Institute. Her research has been supported by the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Bylo Chacon Foundation, the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation/U.S. Latino Digital Humanities Center, California Humanities, UCSD Frontiers of Innovation Scholars Program, the UC Consortium for Black Studies in California Project, the Herbert I. Schiller Communication Dissertation Fellowship, and the UC Office of the President.

LANI CUPCHOY is a public historian-activist-photographer-filmmaker whose research focuses on Chicana-Latina studies, ethnic and gender studies, U.S. transnational/global history, Indigenous knowledge, critical food studies, oral history, digital storytelling, and critical civic engagement. She is also an award-winning filmmaker, whose documentaries Truth Seekers (2016), Urban Seeds (2019), Food Medicine (2020), and Aloha Soul Food (2022) illuminate the power of community engagement and social justice. A former elected school board member for Montebello Unified, Lani led important grassroots policymaking initiatives including the K–12 ethnic studies requirement and the expansion of district-wide school-based gardens. She currently serves as assistant professor of Chicana(o) Latina(o) studies at California State University, Los Angeles.

BRYAN DAVID is a lecturer of history at Truckee Meadows Community College in Reno, Nevada. He holds a PhD in history from the University of Nevada, Reno, and an MA in history from the University of Louisiana at Lafayette. His work has been published in Clio's Quill and H-Net Reviews. He is currently working on revising his dissertation, "Homespun Fun: Theme Parks, Suburbia, and the Postwar Child," for publication.

DAWN A. DENNIS is a public historian who teaches at California State University, Los Angeles, collaborating with the community, museums, and libraries in the LA area. Her work demonstrates a commitment to a community-centered pedagogy that focuses on the need for "restorative history" and a public history practice in archival studies and curatorship. In 2020, she received a California Humanities Quick Grant—in collaboration with Azalea Camacho, Archivist, Special Collections and Archives, and Kendall Faulkner, Social Science Library, J.F.K. Memorial Library, Cal State LA—to produce Mervyn M. Dymally, Bridgebuilder and History Maker, public events and exhibition. Currently, she is collaborating with Project Rebound at Cal State LA and the Los Angeles Regional Reentry Partnership in the creation of an archive dedicated to collecting and preserving the stories of incarcerated and formerly incarcerated people. Dawn is a member of the Historical Society of Southern California's board of directors.

MAX FELKER-KANTOR is an assistant professor of history at Ball State University and the author of Policing Los Angeles: Race, Resistance, and the Rise of the LAPD (2018). Currently, he is finishing a book on schools, race, policing, and the D.A.R.E. program.

JILL FIELDS is a professor of history and founding coordinator of Jewish studies at Fresno State, where she teaches courses in women's history, popular culture, and Jewish studies. She is the author of An Intimate Affair: Women, Lingerie, and Sexuality (2007) and editor of Entering the Picture: Judy Chicago, the Fresno Feminist Art Program, and the Collective Visions of Women Artists (2012).

VOLKER JANSSEN is a professor at California State University, Fullerton, and holds a PhD in history from the University of California, San Diego. He is the editor of Where Minds and Matters Meet: Technology in California and the West (2012) and is currently finishing a history of California's prison reform efforts between World War II and the 1970s. His essay "When the Jungle Met the Forest: Public Work and Civil Defense in California's Prison Camps, 1941–1977" received the Journal of American History's award for best article of 2009.

JORGE N. LEAL is an assistant professor of Chicana/Latina history at the University of California, Riverside. He earned his PhD in U.S. history at the University of California, San Diego. He is currently working on a manuscript that examines how Latina youth-culture participants have reshaped the urban space and advocated for more expansive notions of belonging in late twentieth-century Southern California.

TODD LUCE is an environmental historian with a PhD from the University of California, Riverside, whose work focuses on Southern California. He is currently working on a resource study of homesteading and land use in Joshua Tree National Park and an environmental history of the Salton Sea. When not researching and writing, he teaches English composition at the University of California, Riverside.

MICHELLE MART is an associate professor of history at Penn State University, Berks, and author of Pesticides, A Love Story: America's Enduring Embrace of Dangerous Chemicals (2015). She is currently at work on a study of the intersections of food, the environment, and culture.

GLENN MATTHEWS, an independent scholar in Laguna Beach, has a PhD in American history from Stanford University. She has published six books (one coauthored) and twenty articles, dealing with both California history and women's history.

PIERCE GISSLER McDONNELL grew up next to San Francisco's Presidio, where he first began his study of history through an inspiring internship with the Presidio Park Archives and Records Center. He is the author of J.B. Stetson: The Story of a Ship (2016), a historical account of an early twentieth-century lumber schooner and the evolution of Pacific Coast maritime trade between 1900 and 1935. McDonnell is fluent in Mandarin Chinese and was selected in 2019 as a Chang-Lan Fellow at the national China Maritime Museum in Shanghai; he is currently studying on the campus of National Taiwan University in Taipei. As a sixth-generation San Franciscan and a graduate of Carleton College, McDonnell's research interests center on San Francisco's cultural and economic impact on the broader world.

THOMAS J. OSBORNE, who took his Ph.D. at Claremont Graduate University, is author of Coastal Sage: Peter Douglas and the Fight to Save California's Shore (2018). He is currently writing a book-length study titled "Greening the Golden State: Environmental Leadership and the California Dream, 1850s–2020s."

LAVAR POPE, a clinical associate professor of political science at Loyola University Chicago's Arrupe College, is the author of Rap and Politics: A Case Study of Panther, Gangster, and Hyphy Discourses in Oakland, CA (1965–2010) (2020).

AARON SACHS is a professor of history and American studies at Cornell University. His next book, Stay Cool: Why Dark Comedy Matters in the Fight against Climate Change, is forthcoming in April 2023.

WENDY M. THOMPSON is an assistant professor of African American studies at San José State University, where she specializes in the Black Bay Area, race and the environment, the great Black outdoors, and material expressions of social class. With scholarly work most recently appearing in Women's Studies Quarterly, Slag Glass City, Urban Transcripts Journal, and Radical Teacher, she is currently completing a book manuscript titled Chasing the Sun: Staging Life and Resistance in the Black Bay Area.
