

Contributors

MICHAEL BERNHARD, is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at the Pennsylvania State University. His article on "Barriers to Further Political and Economic Change in Poland," appeared in this journal, vol. XXIII, nos. 3-4, 1990.

GRAEME GILL is a Professor of Government and Public Administration at the University of Sydney. He has published widely on Soviet affairs, his most recent book being The Origins of the Stalinist Political System (Cambridge University Press, 1990). He is currently working on contemporary change in the USSR and Eastern Europe, with emphasis on the fate of the communist party.

WITOLD MORAWSKI is a Professor of Sociology at the University of Warsaw. He was a Visiting Professor at the University of Toronto, 1990-1991. He has published widely in the general area of industrial sociology and was co-editor of, and contributor to, The Breakdown of the Statist Order (Institute of Sociology, Warsaw University, 1988).

PIOTR SZTOMPKA, a Professor of Sociology at the Jagiellonian University in Krakow, has studied problems of social change with emphasis on theories of social movements and revolutions. His most recent book is Society in Action: The Theory of Social Becoming (Polity Press, Cambridge, 1991).

ZHENGYUAN FU, a former fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford, is on leave as Professor at the Chinese Academy of Social Science. He has been teaching and doing research at the University of California, Irvine, and his main research interest is political sociology.