

Contributors

SHARYL CROSS is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at San Jose State University and a Visiting Research Fellow at the Hoover Institution. Professor Cross teaches politics, the foreign policy of the former Soviet Union and its successor states, and United States policy toward Latin America. Her dissertation dealt with the Soviet and Cuban responses to the Nicaraguan revolution.

JOHN ISHIYAMA is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Northeast Missouri State University. His primary research focus is on the impact of founding elections and electoral rules on the evolution of party politics in Eastern Europe.

DAVID M. OLSON is a Professor of Political Science at the University of North Carolina–Greensboro. His research interests include comparative parliaments, democratization processes of Eastern Europe, and representation in federal systems. Recent publications include Legislatures in the Policy Process: The Dilemmas of Economic Policy (with Michael Mezey) and Two into One: The Politics and Processes of National Legislative Cameral Change (with Lawrence Longley).

ANDRUS PARK is a member of the Estonian Academy of Sciences and the Head of its Division of Humanities and Social Sciences in Tallin. His research interests include ethnic conflicts and transition processes from communist/authoritarian regimes.

MARK WEBBER is a Lecturer in Politics in the Department of European Studies, Loughborough University of Technology (UK). He has published articles in the area of Soviet relations with the Third World and is currently preparing a book on the international politics of the former Soviet Union.