

CURRENT HISTORY

September 2009

Vol. 108, No. 719

CONTENTS

- 243 The China-US Relationship Goes Global Kenneth Lieberthal
The elevation of the global economy and climate change to the top of the bilateral agenda introduces new opportunities and perils into the relationship.
- 250 Is Beijing Ready for Global Leadership? Evan S. Medeiros
China is unquestionably a global actor, but it does not yet see itself as a global power, even less a global leader.
- 257 Unruly Stability: Why China's Regime Has Staying Power Andrew G. Walder
A proliferation of local protests notwithstanding, economic reforms have worked, today's youth display national pride, the leadership is unified—and the party-state is more secure than ever.
- 264 China's Beleaguered Intellectuals Merle Goldman
Public intellectuals in China continue to face repression and censorship, yet increasingly they have found ways to get their voices heard.
- 270 Is Japan Lost Again? Edward J. Lincoln
A shrinking population and continuing uncertainties about the impact of economic reforms limit Japan's prospects for a resumption of vigorous growth.
- 277 In China's Economy, the State's Hand Grows Heavier Barry Naughton
A massive injection of liquidity, while forestalling a recession, has also put the long-term health of the nation's economy at risk. First in a series on changing relations between governments and markets.

PERSPECTIVE

- 284 The North Korea Problem: Dealing with Irrationality Bruce Cumings
Why is it so hard for Washington to learn from its mistakes in responding to Pyongyang's regularly recurring provocations?

BOOKS

- 291 The Revolution Will Be Digitized Kate Merkel-Hess
A new book argues that online mobilization and contention in China are not so much a force for change as they are a manifestation of developments already occurring in society.

FOUR MONTHS IN REVIEW

- 293 April–July 2009
An international chronology of events, country by country, day by day, from April through July.
