

CURRENT HISTORY

September 2010

Vol. 109, No. 728

CONTENTS

- 219 A New China Requires a New US Strategy David Shambaugh
The China that is emerging today—domestically, regionally, and internationally—has outgrown the strategies that Washington found useful 10 or 20 years ago.
- 227 Australia Faces a Changing Asia Michael Wesley
Pan-Asian economic integration is eroding the Pacific Rim’s strategic salience and causing Australians to worry: Will they one day have to choose between China and America?
- 232 Japan’s Long Road to Competitive Politics Steven Vogel
The struggling Democratic Party government, after dethroning the long-dominant Liberal Democrats, has so far delivered more political upheaval than policy substance.
- 237 North Korea: How Will It End? Christoph Bluth
The crisis on the peninsula will never be resolved until the international community focuses on the long-term goal of reunifying North and South Korea.
- 244 China’s Population Destiny: The Looming Crisis Wang Feng
A rapidly aging population and shrinking labor force will largely define the People’s Republic—and starkly limit its potential—in the twenty-first century. First in a series on demographic dilemmas around the world.
- 248 Why China’s Gender Gap Persists Mara Hvistendahl
The 30-year-old one-child policy, a remedy for one population problem, begat another: the world’s biggest sex-ratio imbalance.
- 252 The Uncertain Fate of “Chindia” Shalendra D. Sharma
Old border disputes, Beijing’s ties to Pakistan, and fierce competition for energy resources and regional influence could derail China and India’s supposed “convergence.”
- 258 Thailand: From Violence to Reconciliation? Catharin Dalpino
The government in Bangkok is trying to resolve a four-year-old political crisis with a mix of security crackdowns and promises of social justice.
- PERSPECTIVE
- 264 Asia’s Dangerous Security Dilemma Paul Godwin
The military modernization that Beijing regards as defensive is provoking apprehension and countermeasures. The resulting dynamic could threaten the regional stability that all sides want.
- BOOKS
- 267 China Policy for Dummies Devin Stewart
A new book argues an established truism: that China’s model of state capitalism is finding favor with authoritarians in the developing world.
- FOUR MONTHS IN REVIEW
- 269 April–July 2010
An international chronology of events, country by country, day by day, from April through July.