

CURRENT HISTORY

October 2010

Vol. 109, No. 729

CONTENTS

- 275 Medvedev's Potemkin Modernization Lilia Shevtsova
Russia's leaders hope to use Western technology and capital to sustain their corrupt regime. Real change will not come without altering the political elite's genetic code.

- 281 The Transformation of US-Russia Relations Samuel Charap
The bilateral relationship has improved dramatically since Barack Obama became president, but the 2008 Georgia war still casts a long shadow.

- 288 The Enigma of Russian Mortality Nicholas Eberstadt
How can a literate and urbanized European nation exhibit death rates akin to those of conflict-torn, disease-ridden countries in the developing world? Second in a series on demographic dilemmas.

- 295 Eastern Europe's Balancing Act Andrew Wilson
Former Soviet republics appear less interested in merging with Europe than in playing Russia off against the European Union and NATO.

- 301 Kyrgyzstan on the Brink Alexander Cooley
Political instability, ethnic violence, and state collapse could kill democratic aspirations in the impoverished Central Asian nation.

PERSPECTIVE

- 308 How to Bury the Cold War Dmitri Trenin
Building a stable European security architecture requires that the use of force between Russia and its neighbors or NATO be removed from the strategic equation.

BOOKS

- 310 The Not So Wise Men William W. Finan Jr.
A recent book on the development of Soviet studies in America highlights the hazards of mixing politics with scholarship.

THE MONTH IN REVIEW

- 311 August 2010
An international chronology of events in August, country by country, day by day.