Vol. 111, No. 743

CONTENTS

- 83 The Misdiagnosed Debt Crisis Daniel Gros
European policy makers have decided that the euro zone's sovereign debt crisis stems from fiscal profligacy. The real problem is a fragile and poorly regulated banking system.
- 88 Europe's Threatened Solidarity Erik Jones
The debt crisis is raising awkward questions among some European nations about their commitment to regional integration. Fifth in a series on evolving regionalism around the world.
- 94 Can Italy's Monti Save the Euro? Jonathan Hopkin
As Prime Minister Mario Monti seeks painful economic reforms, Italy may be compelled to cede fiscal sovereignty to the European Union. A populist backlash appears likely.
- 101 Why Austerity Isn't Working in Greece Franklin L. Hess
A strong euro policy, favored by Germany, has proved disastrous for Greece and other southern member states. Allowing the currency to devalue makes more sense than unending austerity.
- 106 Ukraine's Perilous Balancing Act Steven Pifer
Kiev has long maneuvered between Russia and the West, but recent backsliding on democracy could cost the Ukrainians tenuous Western support and leave them at Moscow's mercy.
- 112 Sweden's Welfare State at a Turning Point Frederick Hale
Sweden's venerable social model faces growing strains from demographic change and recent immigration, yet it continues to deliver impressive benefits.

PERSPECTIVE

- 118 The New Middle East Will Test Europe. Simon Serfaty
The Arab Spring will sorely try the ability of Europe, mired in financial woes and institutional confusion, to help shape events in its near abroad.
