

CURRENT HISTORY

March 2013

Vol. 112, No. 752

CONTENTS

- 83 Crisis and Reform in the Euro Area Daniela Schwarzer
European leaders deserve more credit for managing the financial crisis. Now they must build joint institutions, with democratic support, to prevent the next one.
- 88 Why 2013 Is Not 1933: The Radical Right in Europe David Art
Fears that economic discontent could enable a fascist resurgence are overblown. Today's far right is characterized by political incompetence and limited appeal.
- 94 The End of Equality in Europe? Jason Beckfield
European integration brought a steep drop in income inequality in the 1950s and 1960s. Subservience to markets and the recent struggles of southern economies have reversed the trend. Sixth in a series on inequality around the world.
- 100 France's Struggle to Compete Ronald Tiersky
Exceptionalist attitudes have foiled efforts to reform the French economy. Building vitality, vis-à-vis Germany's economic clout, will require casting off complacency.
- 107 Diverging Paths in the Western Balkans Jelena Subotic
Serbia and Bosnia remain prisoners of the past, their incompatible memories of injustice preventing reconciliation. Croatia, meanwhile, is on track to join the European club.

PERSPECTIVE

- 114 Germany's Alarming Disaffection David P. Calleo
Germany's postwar leaders played a critical role in creating the European Union. Their successors need to remember that federalism benefits the strong as well as the weak.

BOOKS

- 118 Eastern Europe Behind the Curtain William W. Finan Jr.
A new book by Anne Applebaum offers a heavily detailed, ground-level history of the arrival of communist rule in postwar Eastern Europe. The author aims, she says, to understand "totalitarianism in practice."

THE MONTH IN REVIEW

- 119 January 2013
An international chronology of events in January 2013, country by country, day by day.