CONTENTS

- 123 Drift and Confusion Reign in Indian PoliticsEswaran Sridharan*
Amid corruption scandals, doubts about party leaders, fracturing coalitions, and a slowdown in economic growth, can a stable governing coalition emerge from India's approaching national election?
- 130 Pakistan on the Brink of a Democratic Transition?C. Christine Fair*
Elections expected in May 2013 could produce a second consecutive democratic transition of power. However, the army continues to undermine civilian leadership. And the next government is unlikely to prove capable of undertaking reforms needed to halt Pakistan's perilous decline.
- 137 India's Inequality: An Uneasy Reconciliation with Economic GrowthRoberto Zagha*
India's leaders, though embracing reduced inequality as an explicit goal, have pursued it ineffectively. They need to take steps to accelerate economic growth, as well as to improve the delivery of education and health care. Seventh in a series on income inequality around the world.
- 146 Nepal's Constitutional CrisisAditya Adhikari*
Negotiations for a new Nepali constitution have floundered as Maoists struggle with traditional parliamentary parties for the upper hand, while historically marginalized ethnic groups demand local autonomy.
- PERSPECTIVE
- 152 In Pakistan, a New Focus for CounterterrorismShamila N. Chaudhary*
A spike in Sunni-Shiite violence, increasing collaboration between sectarian and insurgent groups, and US forces' drawdown in neighboring Afghanistan warrant a fresh review of counterterrorism strategy in Pakistan.
- BOOKS
- 155 Afghanistan's Unpromising EndgameWilliam W. Finan Jr.*
Three new books examine how it happened that, 12 years after going to war in Afghanistan, the United States and its allies are preparing to withdraw from a nation still largely ungovernable and pervaded by corruption, warlordism, and insecurity.
- THE MONTH IN REVIEW
- 158 February 2013
An international chronology of events in February, country by country, day by day.
