CONTENTS

- 83 The EU's Democratic Deficit and the Public Sphere . . . . . Jan-Werner Müller
The European Union's legitimacy problem could be cured by transnational forums that allow citizens to join the debate and make their voices heard in Brussels. Fifth in a series on public spheres around the world.
- 89 An East-West Split in the EU? . . . . . Anna Grzymala-Busse
Discordant responses to the refugee crisis seem to have exposed fundamental differences between former Eastern Bloc nations and their Western EU partners. But there are also rifts within each region.
- 95 Cultural Diversity and Its Limits in Western Europe . . . . . Rahsaan Maxwell
A trend of increasing diversity is evident everywhere from mixed-marriage rates to cuisine and music. Yet class and religion remain obstacles to wider acceptance of cosmopolitan values.
- 102 Europe's Social Safety Net Under Pressure . . . . . Giuliano Bonoli
The financial crisis and subsequent austerity have left the future of venerable European welfare states in doubt. A long-term process of labor-market deregulation has already created insiders and outsiders.
- 108 To the Brink and Back in Greece . . . . . Manos Matsaganis
The strange Greek saga of 2015 began with the far left and right uniting under the banner of a virulent nationalism that sees the hands of foreign conspirators behind the country's economic collapse.
- PERSPECTIVE
- 114 Is Germany Really an Environmental Leader? . . . . . Miranda A. Schreurs
The Germans have been early adopters of green standards, and the state has set ambitious renewable-energy targets. But industrial lobbies can still thwart regulations, as the Volkswagen scandal revealed.
- BOOKS
- 117 The EU's Indistinct Identity . . . . . Gerard Delanty
While the European Union has embedded itself in ordinary life through administrative integration and cultural symbols, this "banal authority" may not be enough to handle tough political tests.
- THE MONTH IN REVIEW
- 120 January 2016
An international chronology of events in January, country by country, day by day.
