CONTENTS

- 163 Public Health and Global Interventions in Africa Ruth J. Prince
Western governments and foundations have made Africa the proving ground for a targeted, technocratic approach to disease, at the expense of neglected public health-care systems.
- 169 Term Limits and Beyond: Africa's Democratic Hurdles Adrienne LeBas
"Third-termism" is a malady common among presidents reluctant to leave office. Street protests have pushed out a few, but stronger opposition parties are the best check on power.
- 175 Youthful Dissent Challenges Angola's Old Elite. Justin Pearce
As the gush of oil wealth slows to a trickle, a new generation of Angolans has led protests against entrenched rulers whose intolerance of opposition was forged in the long civil war.
- 181 Stalled Land Reform in South Africa Edward Lahiff
Despite years of government promises and programs to create a more equitable racial balance in rural land rights, the black majority has seen relatively little progress.
- 188 Africa's Emergent Public Sphere Ebenezer Obadare
Fueled by recent democratization and the Internet, public debates in Africa are tapping into the transnational concerns of an influential diaspora. Seventh in a series on public spheres around the world.
- PERSPECTIVE
- 193 Africa After the China Boom Ian Taylor
Chinese demand drove a commodity supercycle that was good for many African economies. Now that it's over, those who failed to cultivate other industries are back to square one.
- BOOKS
- 196 Africa's Young Survivors William Reno
Young people in African countries often can't afford marriage and other conventional hallmarks of adulthood. Yet they have developed valuable skills in the struggle to get by.
- THE MONTH IN REVIEW
- 199 March 2016
An international chronology of events in March, country by country, day by day.
