

CURRENT HISTORY

December 2020

Vol. 119, No. 821

CONTENTS

- 331 Brute Force and Hollow Reforms in Saudi Arabia Madawi Al-Rasheed
A young crown prince has promised bold steps to loosen social restrictions, even while ruthlessly silencing critics and systematically eliminating rivals to the throne.

- 338 Pandemic Politics in Iran Kevan Harris
The coronavirus has taken a heavy toll in Iran, which was already reeling from the return of US sanctions. As factions trade blame, ordinary Iranians suffer.

- 343 Migrant Workers Bear the Pandemic's Brunt in the Gulf Zahra R. Babar
Low-income laborers from abroad comprise a majority of essential workers in the Arab Gulf states, where they are now more surveilled and segregated from the rest of society than ever.

- 349 Refugees' Pandemic Responses in a Palestinian Camp in Lebanon Elena Fiddian-Qasmiyah and Yousif M. Qasmiyah
Residents of a Palestinian refugee camp are helping each other, as well as Syrians, survive the pandemic at a time when neither the Lebanese state nor UN agencies are delivering much aid.

- 356 Social Protection and the Pandemic in the MENA Region Rana Jawad
Nations in the region have subordinated social policy to economic growth. The pandemic has demonstrated the need for universal provision of health care and other essential assistance.

PERSPECTIVE

- 362 Egypt's Old Affliction of Aloof Rulers Khaled Fahmy
Despite upbeat official reports, the pandemic has decimated Egyptian doctors. Their calls for more support have been silenced by a state long intolerant of dissent and devoted to its own interests.

BOOKS

- 365 Late Ottoman Intrigue and Legacies Across the Mediterranean Joshua Lustig
The story of a Tunisian statesman in exile who fought to keep his estates shows how individual actors navigated—and even manipulated—the region's overlapping imperial regimes.