IN THIS ISSUE

CURRENT HISTORY takes pleasure in presenting the first of a series of two interesting articles by Richard W. Van Alstyne on British and United States policies in Greece. Mr. Van Alstyne for 20 years has specialized in American diplomacy and foreign policy. He is Professor of American Diplomatic History at the University of Southern California and has studied and taught both in this country and abroad.

Claire Nix is a research assistant and seminar secretary at the Harvard Graduate School of Public Administration. Miss Nix, a graduate of Radcliffe in 1939, is well acquainted with German political emigrants in this country. She not only sees considerable personal correspondence from Germany, but also follows numerous German journals which have appeared since the occupation.

Francis Godwin James is Assistant Professor of History at the Carnegie Institute of Technology. He completed his undergraduate work at the University of Virginia and at the Sorbonne and received his Ph.D. in history from Yale University in 1940. Professor James writes, "I have found almost all students badly confused in their thinking about tariffs, trade and international debts. The article is a result of my efforts to clarify these points."
