Heading into its third year, the COVID-19 pandemic continues to test prior assumptions about how the world works. States have exerted control over citizens’ personal autonomy in ways little seen in peacetime, yet citizens have also resisted, often in seemingly irrational ways. In other aspects, the pandemic has brutally stripped away illusions of global order and cooperation, as the strongest have taken what they need to save themselves, leaving poorer nations at the mercy of the virus. Current History’s January issue will cover these trends and more across the globe. Topics scheduled to appear include:

- The Pandemic Breeds New Forms of Power
  Engin Isin, Queen Mary University of London

- Security, Migration, and the Pandemic
  Fiona Adamson, SOAS University of London
  Kelly Greenhill, Tufts University

- Aging, Inequality, and COVID-19
  Kavita Sivaramakrishnan, Columbia University

- Disability and Legal Autonomy
  Chester A. Finn, Community Empowerment Programs
  Michael Ashley Stein and Hezzy Smith, Harvard Law School
  Fifth in a series

- On the Frontier of Digital Currencies
  Barry Eichengreen, University of California, Berkeley

- Is the Shipping Industry Still Seaworthy?
  Jean-Paul Rodrigue, Hofstra University
