CONTENTS

- 163 The Anatomy of Ethiopia’s Civil War . . . . . Kjetil Tronvoll
Should Ethiopia be a unified state with a singular national identity, or a multiethnic federation? A set of overlapping center–periphery disputes led to the outbreak of war in late 2020.
- 170 Chad after Idriss Déby . . . . . Judith Scheele
The longtime “boss of the Sahel” is gone, leaving behind a country in which the military is one of the few national institutions offering basic services and opportunities for advancement.
- 177 The Elusive Dream of Democracy, Security, and Well-Being in Mozambique . . . . . Celso M. Monjane and M. Anne Pitcher
With the ruling party more entrenched than ever, political insiders dominate the economy. Corruption scandals and a regional insurgency have hindered development.
- 184 Nairobi’s Rise as a Digital Platform Hub . . . . . Prince K. Guma
In Kenya’s capital, digital payment platforms have proliferated, taking unexpected forms. They promise improved public services and distinctly African modes of smart urbanism.
- 190 Disability Rights and Wrongs in Uganda . . . . . Tyler Zoanni
In a nation with some of the most progressive disability laws in the world, daily life for disabled people is as challenging as ever. Ninth in a series on disability rights around the world.
- PERSPECTIVE
- 196 States of Emergency—The Apartheid Paranoia in South Africa’s Lockdown . . . . . Hlonipha Mokoena
Memories of the past have shaped the responses of many South Africans to the pandemic, from racialized assumptions about contagions to fear of the infrastructures of state control.
- BOOKS
- 199 Fighting for Africa . . . . . Nemata Blyden
Weaving his family history into accounts of Africa’s influence on the world, from Europe to the Americas, a noted journalist calls for recognition of the continent’s role in global history.
