Background to Nationalism

JAMES S. COLEMAN. Of the forces that are reshaping the world today, nationalism is surely among the most powerful. Its significance, particularly in African and Asian affairs, is difficult to overestimate. Beginning with the inauguration of British rule in 1900, Mr. Coleman describes and analyzes the events that have caused Nigerians to demand—and the British to promise—independence in 1960. The author examines such developments as the breakdown of tribal organization, the introduction of Western-style economy, and the effects of urbanization.

TITOISM IN ACTION

The Reforms in Yugoslavia, 1948-1954

FRED WARNER NEAL. A specialist on Eastern Europe, Mr. Neal has made a first hand study of the Yugoslavs' policies and problems; he describes in detail the measures aimed at workers' control of industry and decentralization of state and party functions. He explores the discrepancies between theory and practice that have developed in such matters, and points out the underlying strategic factors that have conditioned the policies of the Titoist regime.

PILOT PROJECT, INDIA

ALBERT MAYER, IN COLLABORATION WITH MCKIM MARRIOTT AND RICHARD L. PARK. How best to give the rural populations of Africa and Asia the benefits of modern technology—this is a question of pressing importance to thoughtful men everywhere. India's answer is a nationwide program derived in great measure from the Pilot Development Project of Etawah District. Here, for the first time is a comprehensive study of this significant experiment in rural development. Mr. Mayer, as much as any man, was responsible for the success of the Project.

RUSSIAN FAR EASTERN POLICY, 1881-1904

ANDREW MALOZEMOFF. An astute and objective history of Russian expansion in the Far East—from the original difficulties of colonization through the strategic complexities of building the trans-Siberian railroad to the conflicts over Manchuria, China, and Korea that terminated in the Russo-Japanese War.

TSARIST RUSSIA AND BALKAN NATIONALISM

CHARLES JELAVICH. This comprehensive study deals with the period 1879-1886, when Russia was struggling for political alliances. It analyzes Russia's Near Eastern policy, giving particular attention to Russian involvement in nationalist developments in Bulgaria and Serbia. The author shows Russian policy in Europe at that time to have been dominated by three considerations: avoidance of diplomatic isolation, security at the Straits, and protection of the Russian position in Bulgaria—the center of Russian Diplomacy.
