COMING IN OCTOBER

Russia

The empire that was, the would-be empire, the bankrupt gangster state: Russia appears to be regarded as anything but the sober, strong strategic partner the United States hoped to groom in the years since the collapse of the Soviet Union. In October our authors once again visit the political and economic wreckage that litters the post-Communist Russian landscape. Topics scheduled to appear include:

Russia and America: So (Un)Happy Together
Anatol Lieven, International Institute for Strategic Studies, London

Making Sense of Russia's "Democracy"
Thomas Graham, Carnegie Endowment

Three Scenarios for the Russian Economy
James Millar, George Washington University

In Search of a Russian Foreign Policy
Sherman Garnett, Carnegie Endowment

The Baltics, Ten Years Later
James Kurth, Swarthmore College

Russia and the Future of Strategic Arms Control
Ronald Powaski, Cleveland State University
