EDITORS' NOTES

White-collar sentencing is in as much flux today as it was five years ago when FSR published its last Issue on this topic, making our current set of articles particularly timely. We are especially grateful to the Honorable Jed S. Rakoff for permission to reprint his keynote address from the 2013 ABA National Institute on White-Collar Crime, which received a substantial amount of attention when it was delivered. By making the speech available to a wider audience, we hope to continue to stimulate discussion on this important subject.

Indeed, we hope that this Issue is just the beginning of a larger conversation. We are excited to announce that FSR is planning to hold a half-day CLE conference in New York as a follow-up to the Issue. For more details, please check Professor Douglas Berman's website, Sentencing Law and Policy (<http://sentencing.typepad.com>), or contact any of the FSR editors.

Our next Issue will focus on the Department of Justice's policy shift in charging crimes that trigger mandatory maximum sentences. We also look forward to publishing several papers from this year's National Association of Sentencing Commissions (NASC) conference. As always, we invite submissions.

Finally, we bid farewell to our friend and colleague Anna G. Kaminska, who recently left Proskauer Rose. For more than six years, Anna was an integral part of Proskauer's sentencing practice, and was heavily involved in producing FSR, including the last White-Collar Issue and this one as well. We wish her much success in her new endeavors.
