SUBMISSIONS

The Journal of Musicology welcomes articles in all areas of musical scholarship, including history, criticism, analysis, and performance practice. The Journal does not regularly publish reviews, but invites proposals for review essays on important books, music editions, and conference reports. All articles are published in English. Submissions should be sent in electronic form (as an attachment to an e-mail message) to submissions@journalofmusicology.org. Please include an abstract and complete contact information (e-mail, telephone, and postal address). Full instructions, including a postal address for materials that cannot be sent electronically, are at www.journalofmusicology.org.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Stephen Amico is associate professor of music at the Grieg Academy, University of Bergen, Norway. He has published widely in the areas of popular music, post-Soviet culture, and gender and sexuality, including the book Roll Over, Tchaikovsky! Russian Popular Music and Post-Soviet Homosexuality (University of Illinois Press, 2014). A previous recipient of a NIAS (Netherlands Institute for Advanced Studies) Fellowship, he is currently at work on a monograph exploring female vocality and voice in Russian-language popular music.

Aaron A. Fox is associate professor of music and the director of the Center for Ethnomusicology at Columbia University. He is the author of Real Country: Music and Language in Working-Class Culture (Duke University Press, 2004) and currently conducts NSF-sponsored research on issues of Indigenous cultural property and rights. He is also a professional guitarist and performs with several New York City-area rock bands.

Anna Schultz is associate professor of music at the University of Chicago, where she is also an associate member of the Department of South Asian Languages and Civilizations and a member of the Greenberg Center for Jewish Studies. The core issue animating her research in India and beyond is music's power to activate profound religious experiences that in turn shape other identities. Her first book, Singing a Hindu Nation: Marathi Devotional Performance and Nationalism, was published by Oxford University Press in 2013; her second book, Songs of Translation: Bene Israel Gender and Textual Orality, is also under contract with Oxford.

Naomi Waltham-Smith is associate professor in the Centre for Interdisciplinary Methodologies at the University of Warwick. At the intersection of music, sound studies, and recent European philosophy, her work appears in a wide range of journals, including Music Theory Spectrum, Journal of Music Theory, Music Analysis, boundary 2, CR: The New Centennial Review, diacritics, and parrhesia. She is the author of Music and Belonging Between Revolution and Restoration (Oxford University Press, 2017) and her second monograph, The Sound of Biopolitics: Life, Auality, Deconstruction, is forthcoming with Fordham University Press.

Joshua Navon is a lecturer in music at Columbia University, where he earned his PhD in Historical Musicology in 2019. His research analyzes various pedagogical and scientific arenas in which musical expertise has been defined and produced, with a focus on music conservatories and the psychological sciences in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Supported by a research fellowship from the Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst (DAAD), his dissertation shows how the development of German conservatory training reshaped classical musicians' practices and related discourses of human musicality.

Louis Epstein is assistant professor of music at St. Olaf College. His articles appear in Music & Politics and the Revue de musicologie, and he won the 2016 AMS Teaching Award for his digital publication www.musicalgeography.org. He is currently working on a book titled "The New Patronage: Funding Modernist Music in France, 1918–1939."
