Contributors to this issue:

JEFF DOLVEN is the author of Scenes of Instruction (Chicago, 2007). He teaches at Princeton University.

RAMIE TARGOFF is Professor of English and the Jehuda Reinharz Director of the Mandel Center for the Humanities at Brandeis University. Her new book, Posthumous Love: Eros and the Afterlife in Renaissance England, is forthcoming from University of Chicago Press in 2013.

SETH KOVEN, author of Slumming: Sexual and Social Politics in Victorian London, teaches European, gender/women's, and British history at Rutgers University. His forthcoming book, The Match Girl and the Heiress: Christian Revolution in the London Slums, will be published by Princeton University Press.

LAURA ANNE KALBA is an Assistant Professor of art history at Smith College in Northampton, MA. The research presented here is partially derived from her book project, tentatively titled Color in the Age of Impressionism: Technology, Commerce, and Art, which examines the impact of new color technologies on French material and visual culture from the early commercialization of synthetic dyes to the Lumière brothers' perfection of the autochrome photography process.

GYEWON KIM is Robert and Lisa Sainsbury Fellow at the Sainsbury Institute for the Study of Japanese Arts and Cultures. She is the author of recent articles on photography, the archive, and the politics of vision and representation in Japan and Korea. Beginning this year, she will serve as an Assistant Professor at Georgia State University.
