Contributors to this issue:

ELAINE FREEDGOOD is Professor of English at New York University, where she works on Victorian literature and culture, critical theory, and the history of the novel. She is the author of Victorian Writing About Risk: Imagining a Safe England in a Dangerous World (Cambridge, 2000) and The Ideas in Things: Fugitive Meaning in the Victorian Novel (Chicago, 2006). Her current project is called “Worlds Enough: Fictionality and Reference in the Novel.”

CANNON SCHMITT teaches English at the University of Toronto. The author of Alien Nation: Nineteenth-Century Gothic Fictions and English Nationality (1997) and Darwin and the Memory of the Human: Evolution, Savages, and South America (2009, paperback reprint 2013), he is currently at work on the Victorian novel, the sea, and the literal.

IAN DUNCAN teaches in the English department at the University of California, Berkeley. His books include Scott's Shadow: The Novel in Romantic Edinburgh (Princeton, 2007), Modern Romance and Transformations of the Novel: The Gothic, Scott, Dickens (Cambridge, 1992), and Scotland and the Borders of Romanticism (co-editor: Cambridge, 2004). He is currently writing a book on the novel and the “science of man.”

RACHEL SAGNER BUURMA (rbuurma1@swarthmore.edu) is Assistant Professor of English Literature at Swarthmore College. She is working on a book about the research practices of Victorian novelists. Additionally, she and Laura Heffernan are co-authoring a new disciplinary history that sees historicism's referential research and provisional aesthetic values as central to the identity and classroom practices of English as a discipline.

LAURA HEFFERNAN (l.a.heffernan@gmail.com) is Assistant Professor of English at the University of North Florida. She is writing a book about how modernist literary critics began to research taste rather than model it. “The Common Reader and the Archival Classroom,” an essay from her collaborative book project with Rachel Buurma, recently appeared in New Literary History.

MARGARET COHEN teaches in the Department of Comparative Literature at Stanford University, where she holds the Andrew B. Hammond Chair in French Language, Literature, and Civilization. Her recent research has focused on the marine and maritime humanities, including the book The Novel and the Sea (2010) and a book in progress, Intoxication at Depth, on the impact of the underwater frontier on literature and the visual arts.
