Contributors to this issue:

MARTHA FELDMAN is the Edwin A. and Betty L. Bergman Distinguished Service Professor of Music at the University of Chicago. Her books include Opera and Sovereignty (Chicago, 2007), The Castrato (Oakland, 2015), and the coedited The Voice as Something More: Essays toward Materiality (Chicago, 2019). She is now working on a book on castrato phantoms in twentieth-century Rome.

NICHOLAS MATHEW is Professor of Music at the University of California, Berkeley. He is the author of Political Beethoven (Cambridge, 2013) and The Haydn Economy, forthcoming with the University of Chicago Press.

JESSICA SWANSTON BAKER is Assistant Professor of Ethnomusicology at the University of Chicago, where she teaches and researches in the fields of Caribbean music and archipelagic and critical Caribbean studies, as well as in theories of the postcolonial, race, and sexuality. Her current book project, Island Time: Speed, Music, and Modernity in St. Kitts and Nevis, is an ethnographic and historical examination of changing conceptions of temporality as understood through the sonic worlds of postcolonial youth in the eastern Caribbean twin-island nation St. Kitts and Nevis.

MARTIN STOKES is King Edward Professor of Music at King’s College London and Leverhulme Senior Research Fellow 2019–22.

CAROLYN ABBATE is Paul and Catherine Buttenwieser University Professor at Harvard University, where she teaches in the Music Department. She works on opera, Western music philosophy, and sound objects and artifacts; with Roger Parker, she co-authored A History of Opera: The Last 400 Years (2015). Current research centers on mischievous sound technologies and acoustic devices from the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries and their place in histories of hearing and mishearing.

GUNDULA KREUZER is Professor of Music at Yale University and author of the award-winning Verdi and the Germans: From Unification to the Third Reich (Cambridge, 2010) as well as Curtain, Gong, Steam: Wagnerian Technologies of Nineteenth-Century Opera (Oakland, 2018). She edited Verdi’s chamber music for The Works of Giuseppe Verdi and serves on several editorial boards, including as reviews editor for Opera Quarterly. In 2019, she received the Dent Medal of the Royal Musical Association and launched the annual YOST: Y | Opera | Studies Today symposium to explore contemporary experimental opera.

MARY ANN SMART is Gladys Arata Terrill Professor in the Department of Music at the University of California, Berkeley. She is the author of Mimomania: Music and Gesture in Nineteenth-Century Opera and Waiting for Verdi: Opera and Political Opinion in Italy. She is currently at work on a book about the impact of new technologies and modes of listening on French theories of language in the mid-twentieth century.
JAMES CHANDLER teaches at the University of Chicago, where he is the William K. Ogden Distinguished Service Professor in the Department of English and the Department of Cinema and Media Studies. His books include*An Archaeology of Sympathy: The Sentimental Mode in Literature and Cinema*(Chicago, 2013) and England in 1819: The Politics of Literary Culture and the Case of Romantic Historicism (Chicago, 1998). From 2001 to 2018, he was director of the Franke Institute for the Humanities, where he was Principal Investigator for a series of Mellon-funded projects addressing the transformation of humanities and social science disciplines, including the Musical Pasts Consortium. His new book, How to Do Criticism, will be published next year by Blackwell.

GARY TOMLINSON is John Hay Whitney Professor of Music and Humanities at Yale University. His most recent books are A Million Years of Music: The Emergence of Human Modernity and Culture and the Course of Human Evolution.

DELIA CASADEI is Assistant Professor of Musicology at the University of California, Berkeley. She has published work on the intersection of voice, ideologies of language and intelligibility, and politics in twentieth-century Italian music. At the moment, she is working on a project on the vocal and political phenomenon of laughter—particularly recorded laughter—in the twentieth century.